The main objective of adoption is to help a couple to complete their family. The advantage of adoption is that a childless person can make somebody else's child as his own. Thus adoption means transplantation of the child from the family of his birth to the adoptive family. There are six product adoption stages including awareness, interest, evaluation, trial, activation, and adoption. Product adoption isn't always a linear process—users can jump between stages. There are also five adopter profiles—innovators, early adopters, early majority, late majority, and laggard. Acceptance of a child is an emotional readiness to adopt an unrelated child concerns about the social background of the child and genetic factors.
